

The possible interference to GPS would make it impossible to do much of the work the business I work for does. We are an aerial survey company, and precision airborne GPS is linked to images used mainly by government agencies for mapping which is eventually used in infrastructure and environmental planning. Please consider the far-reaching impact of these planning tools being unavailable.