

Denying the AT&T T-Mobile merger was a no-brainer. AT&T ran a deceptive PR, advertising and lobbying campaign to Monopolize Everything while using the slogan "Mobilize Everything" but it fortunately failed to trick regulators or public interest groups.

AT&T has become used to getting its way in Washington D.C. with campaign contributions to lawmakers they've wielded enormous political and economic clout. This merger made no sense and was largely supported by their corporate skills -- industry lobbyists paid to spread their propaganda. Only people with economic interest in the merger -- shareholders of AT&T, Deutsche Telekom AG, financiers (bankers) financing the merger and those bribed to support the merger were the only ones really for the merger with the exception of gullible consumers and fanboys of the company AT&T gullible enough to believe that company's lies.
