

Recently, while watching The Rifleman on AMC, during the daytime hours, a commercial was broadcast for "The Titan Twister", a sexual aid. I have always enjoyed AMC's programming because the older series and movies are free of profanity, vulgarity, and overt sexual situations. My 9-year-old daughter often watches this channel when she is home during the day because of school breaks or the weather. It is absolutely unthinkable to me that this commercial, or commercials that advertise remedies or prescription drugs for impotence or other sexual disfunctions, be shown during hours when children are likely to be watching TV. Please put a stop to this practice. Those of us who are trying to live and raise our children with Christian values are finding it more difficult by the day . Thank you.
