

It's time to end to the sports blackout rule. It is an unnecessary and anti-consumer regulation that only benefits team owners. Fans and taxpayers have already heavily subsidized professional sports, so blackouts are unethical and punish fans who can't afford the high cost of attending games or who don't have the right TV provider. The government should not be in the business of propping up sports leagues' counterproductive blackouts. Keep the games on the air!