

I am a Buffalo Bills season ticket holder (3 – 4 seats), and have been for 7 years. I travel the 65 miles each way and incur the gas, tolls, parking, food, plus the obvious ticket expenses. It is ridiculous the amount of money I have to spend in order to guarantee I can see my favorite team play football. The blackout rule is a joke and quite hypocritical to say the least. Tax payer money helps fund the stadium, the infrastructures and the law enforcement that assist at the site. Why can the NFL dictate such rules in regards to blackouts? What makes the NFL the end all be all authority? If I for some reason didn't want to travel to the game and give my tickets away, I am often left unable to watch my team. So I buy tickets to support them, pay taxes in NY which directly offers tax incentives to the NFL, yet I am left in the dark. CHANGE THIS IGNORANT POLICY!
