

ATT isn't saying the $4 billion charge is being passed on to their customers. They're saying they have to raise prices because they are capacity-restrained. Which they are not. They lost the opportunity to inflict over-priced, sub-standard service on T-Mobile subscribers, so now they have to do even more of that to their existing ones. Until they leave.