

I do a fair amount of boating mostly now in Florida but when I was in New England lobstering and Clamming GPS was very important in locating my pots and clam flast, since I had to deal with fog fairly often in around the Merrimack river. It is also important to me down here in Florida, since I am learning the waters and I use GPS to get specific locations. I would be deeply concerned should there be any unnecessary interference with the GPS system.