

I use GPS while driving around US for business and in family trips. Also I rely heavily on GPS while sailing. I bought top of the line Garmin GPS because it saves me a lot of time and aggravation. If that would stop working, I would have to spend more time on the road, probably my driving would become more dangerous because I would be distracted trying to follow map.

I do not see the need for another wireless company. Existing ones can improve their services and optimize their bandwidth utilisation (digitizing voice calls, compressing data transmission, simplifying websites to be less data hungry).

LightSquared's proposed network looks more like a securities fraud and should be investigated as such.

I believe the purpose of FCC is to protect the interests of the majority of US citizens, in this case GPS users like me.

I support FCC's decision to stop LightSquared's infringement on GPS.
