

Big-money donors should not be able to control the political agenda while hiding behind the names of front groups. The public won't stand for deceptive advertising this election season or any election season.

Is your TV inundated with political ads this election season?

Super PACs and third-party organizations will spend hundreds of millions of dollars to air political ads that distort the issues, attack candidates and mislead voters. What these ads don't do is disclose the names of the moneyed interests that fund these messages.

Instead wealthy corporations and individuals hide behind innocuous-sounding names like Restore Our Future, the Committee for Political Truth and Priorities U.S.A. without revealing their true identities. It's nearly impossible to tell who's trying to influence our vote.

It's time to demand the truth. We need to know exactly who is paying to influence us, and this information should be displayed in the ads themselves. Please consider filing a complaint with the Federal Communications Commission.
