

I hail your common sense, the intrusion on the GPS system by a company who will not care if the performance of GPS signaling is affected should not be allowed under any circumstance. The GPS system has grown to monumental importance world wide, and is used by all consumers for basic navigation to search and rescue. This unique system must be protected from exploitation by anyone, any current or future ideas of releasing bandwidth to outside influences should be strongly discouraged.

Jim Murtland