

My husband and I have traveled many places on our 50 ft. trawler- from the United States to Panama. We have relied on our GPS in countless cases and countless places. Now that we have taken our boat to Puget Sound, Washington, we are looking forward to exploring that area and also Alaska. We KNOW that our GPS will be very valuable as we travel around and through the many islands and coastlines in the Northwest. It is inconceivable that the FCC would allow Lightsquared to endanger the safety of boaters like us who count on our GPS systems day in and day out. PLEASE do not allow this new system to go into effect UNLESS it is verified that it will not interfere with boating GPS use which helps to protect us on the water. Thank you for being concerned about US- the private citizens of the United States of America.
