

GPS services have become a critical part of many substantive segments of our society. I rely on it for automotive navigation as well as recreational uses of marine travel and geocaching. I certainly hope that the FCC will not "sell out" to private industry so that one company can make a profit at the expense of all the citizens who have come to rely on the system. This should be such a "no brainer" that I'm surprised that the FCC has even allowed the issue to reach this stage. GPS services should be retained and even improved, if possible.
