

It is never appropriate for a public agency to cut off communications. Besides the public's first amendment right as specified by 'Congress shall make NO LAW... abridging the freedom of speech', basic safety considerations -- calling out in case of a medical or other emergency, dictate that it is inexcusable that such action be contemplated in all but the most extreme emergencies.