

As a cable consumer who utilized Clear QAM on multiple devices, I strongly oppose the move to eliminate the requirement that cable companies provide the service. I would be forced to purchase new equipment to enable the same level of service I have now (I would need to purchase devices which can change channels on the cable provided box externally, instead of using the internal tuner of my devices. This would add no additional benefit to me, and would do nothing but cost all parties more money. It makes no sense to change a system which is perfectly functional for one that is demonstrably less so.
