

I do not think it is right for the wireless companies to be able to charge for an added line, if the consumer buys a second mobile telephone and wants to share his minutes and texting with his spouse. I believe the customer should be able to share his minutes and texting with his spouse for free, providing he/she pays for the mobile device, and does not add more minutes or texting to his account.