

As deaf customer of VRS I do not feel that CA (Video Interpreters) needs to be nationally certified. There are many different way to screen the Video Interpreter's skills including (not limited to) state test and employment screen process. As long as there are some way to screen the Video Interpreter's skill and they receive result that will show their skill level and I trust that the VRS company will determine if they are skill enough to work as Video Interpreter and also continue to provide Professional Development support. VRS company who provides service should have some kind of test process to verify their skills to qualify for the job.
