

Amid Big Red's proposal to quell criticism for ending unlimited data for its existing users by promising to continue it for consumers who pay the full retail price for their smartphones (that is they get them un-subsidized) it is worth noting even then there is no guarantee Verizon might not change the terms again and try to force even those who buy un-subsidized phones in the future into tiered plans. I urge the FCC to investigate their business practices and for any wireless Net Neutrality violations, deny the Verizon SpectrumCo and Cox deals, require 700 MHz Interoperability and adopt reasonable AWS Service Rules that are pro consumer, support competition and don't overly burden businesses more than necessary.
