

The Open Internet is a powerful tool for public advocacy, civic engagement and political activism. The citizenry can use it to communicate with their lawmakers and with regulators about legislation or about a notice of proposed rulemaking announcing new regulations. In the next document attached with this filing I will raise some of the concerns environmental activists and Keystone XL critics have been using the Open Internet to address. The point though of this ecfs filing is to explain how the Open Internet is so vital and why the FCC must do all it can to protect the Open Internet from ISP discrimination etc.
