

I just heard that AT&T and Verizon declined millions offered by the FCC to bring high speed internet to rural areas. My telephone company is AT&T. How about offering some money to a upstart company here in Dunnellon Florida called Greenlight, that is starting a fiber optic cable company. I called them and they said I live too far out at the present time (about 10 miles). But they took my name to call when they expand. Maybe they would accept money from the FCC to expand where AT&T will not. Dial up internet is so slow and depressing. Thanks for listening.
