

There has been an absolutely DISGRACEFUL lack of consumer protection for US consumers for the last twenty years or so, and all of the "Mergers and Acquisitions" that have taken place in that time have not served the public interest in the least. Quite to the contrary: we hardly have any real substantive competition in the telecommunication and cable media industries. Rather, we have monopolies that violate the spirit if not the letter of the Sherman Antitrust Act every day.

History will not be kind when relating your role in this matter unless you start to do your job and protect the American people from soulless, rapacious multinational corporations who don't want to have to innovate or compete in order to get all of our money: they just want to take it.
