

Competition is what keeps consumer prices lower than they would be without it. If you "broke up" AT&T to provide more competition, why would you sanction a virtual monopoly now? The companies can still engage in collusion without your assistance but your job description is to abrogate such actions by companies and thereby protect the consumer from price gouging. Or should we rename you the Federal Cave-in Commission?