

I oppose the prospective deal between Verizon Wireless and the nation's largest cable companies including Comcast and Time Warner to come together and sell each other's products and services.

If these companies are no longer competing, consumers will have higher cable and Internet rates and will lose the freedom to choose between providers. And with no competition, these companies will lose incentive to keep up with improvements.