

Comment on cable services.

Cable companies are already large and have virtual monopolies in parts of the country. Allowing them to sell each other's services would reduce the competition needed to have a healthy free market. Verizon already reaps large profits from its cable, cell and regular telephone markets. It does not need the ability to sell other services to remain a viable company.