

Terrestrial TV stations were forced to broadcast in HD (high definition) a couple of years ago. As time has passed, the public has invested billions in high definition technology. Carriers are squabbling over charges for broadcasting HD programming, and the consumer is losing out because carriers are down converting the signal to SD. Can we force cable and satellite providers to deliver all content in HD, outlaw down converting signals to SD, or give consumers the choice to purchase only the channels that they desire?

Best Regards,

-Seann