

As a concerned citizen, I feel that cable companies already have little competition and that consumers pay very taxing price for cable services. We citizens have been in dire need of a more competitive market to break the current pseudomonopoly. The FCC should require Verizon Wireless to build its own fiber-optic (FiOS) network to create cable competition. Not only would this create a more fair and competitive market, it would also have the secondary benefit of jobs creation for our citizens.

Please do not cave in to the powerful cable lobby wishes. The status quo is already grossly and unfairly favorable to them. If this latest issue goes their way, we the people become the losers (again).

Cordially,

Martin J Garcia
