

They are in a panic because cable tv in its current form will soon go the way of the land line. Why pay for TV service at crazy high rates (they recently did a $20/month price hike in my area) when services are becoming available over the internet? If these companies had any sense at all they would start providing an online stream of all of their programming for a lower rate. They don't even need to provide a physical cable at that point (other than for their internet services) and anyone anywhere could subscribe with that cable company using any ISP.
