

The Open Internet enables political activism for ordinary citizens and especially progressives fighting conservatives attempts to roll back the progress of the 20th century by taking us back to a 1920s economic policy, a restrictive and radical anti-choice social policies of the 1950s or the foreign policies of the 1980s. We must continue protecting the Open and Neutral Internet and have policies protecting and promoting competition in the wire-line and wireless markets.
