

This is about cable TV service and the including of the pornographic channels and programs on the general guide.

I am sure many customers would want the option of not having these channels showing up on there TV guide at all, but no such option exist.

I have also had problems getting the raunchy titles blocked. I had to threaten to file an FCC complaint to get the customer service person for my cable company to tell me how to block the titles from showing up. Until the threat, she was insisting it was no longer possible to block the titles. I have a 5 year old child who can read at a 4th grade level, and I don't want her seeing that. I don't want to see it.

So, I do now have the titles hidden - after threatening to file a complaint - but I still have this large block of channels advertising Adult Programing - and I would much rather not. With everything digital now - why can't these companies remove these channels from the guide entirely if you ask them too?

I know why they don't want too. It's clear enough, just from the initial refusal to tell me how to hide the raunchy titles: They hope to titillate and tempt with their pay per view filth and thus make a bit more money off their porn channels. But I feel strongly a customer ought to have the option of not being tried by the temptation - or subjected to such offense - just because they want television service.
