

As a teenager growing up in Oakland County, I was always using my cell phone for calls. Then, as a college student at Michigan State University, I was always using my cell phone for calls and texts. As an adult in Oakland County, I call, text, take pictures, browse online, facebook, tweet, pinterest, gchat, listen to Pandora, check MSU score updates, look at the weather, buy movie tickets, find recipes, etc, all on my phone. As my use has increased over time, I expect my coverage to increase as well. But it doesn't. I've found that the more I type, tap and snap, I pay more while my coverage remains poor. This is unacceptable. We need companies like LightSquared to wholesale it's LTE mobile broadband service so that I can have solid coverage in every room of my house (not just in the living room thanks to the bay window) at a decent price. Current carriers are driving prices up. We need an alternative to join the wireless game and drive prices down.
