

The FCC should not issue a waiver to the City of Philadelphia, PA for the narrowbanding deadline. Cities in the United States larger than Philadelphia have been able to complete their narrowbanding projects from inception to completion in 18 months and before the deadline. By filing a waiver this late in 2012, and requesting an 18 month extension, the city clearly shows it had no intention of completing the project in the designated time-frame, and total disdain towards the FCC.
