

Has the FCC dropped enforcement of the Do Not Call list entirely? I continually get spam calls from credit card services and various telemarketers on all phones, landline and cellular, despite all of them being on the Do Not Call list. When I challenge the callers or even ask for their names and business numbers, they just hang up. They don't seem to care at all that they are violating federal law by calling. It has gotten much worse in the last 2 years or so. Is the FCC going to do nothing?
