

The FCC should really regulate data on the carriers. Technology is only getting more advanced. Smartphones use way more data and not everyone is around wifi when they would use data the most. Say on lunch break or on a road trip. Texting, surfing the web is all data. Customers should be able to have unlimited at a fair price if they want it. Even companies like Straight Talk that offer unlimited data will cut you off if you use too much data. Watching one movie on Netflix will use 2 GBs of data. I'm not sure where to leave this comment at if in the wrong section, or if there is one yet for it. Also I think we should have the option to have data only if we want to use our phone as voice over IP.

Thank You.
