

I don't know of anybody that doesn't have cable or satellite. Nudity and profanity can be heard in movies, real life and television. I don't think there should be a different standard for networks and cable. You have all the cable channels being popular because they can do more outrageous programming and it is the parents responsibility to monitor their children's viewing content. A Lot of content is now downloadable so what is the point of restricting networks of holding them to a different standard except to give an unfair business advantage to cable. Whatever standard you choose to enforce should be equally enforced to both media. What makes it indecent on one but not the other?
