

I oppose any changes to the current FCC indecency standards that would allow television and radio stations to broadcast expletives and nudity on the public airwaves, even if brief or "fleeting."

The Supreme Court has confirmed the FCC's authority to enforce policies regarding expletives and nudity, especially during times when children are likely to be watching or listening.

Relaxing the current policy would not serve the public interest and I urge the FCC to reject all proposals that would allow for the broadcast of expletives and nudity on FCC-licensed stations.

Also, I urge the FCC to investigate why anyone in their right mind would propose the children of the nation to hear more profanity and see more nudity? I mean, what in the world are you guys thinking?

So, is it just to reduce the amount of complaints? Why don't you start enforcing the laws that are in place and broadcasters will start to listen, especially when you put large fines on them. Doing that will reduce complaints because broadcasters will eventually stop breaking the law.

If you want to change anything, it should be to increase the fines with breaking the current indecency standards. I say hit them where it hurts! Then your complaints will decrease due to broadcasters afraid to break the law. When they stop breaking the law, people will stop sending complaints. It is not rocket science!
