

The FCC should not lower its decency standards. Families and children are already subject to indecent and obscene material from many sources. For those who desire such elements there are not lacking in access to that kind of media. The FCC should evaluate cases of indecency on a case by case basis, there may be cases where brief non sexual nudity may be acceptable, but I would not want to see that become the accepted norm. Similarly with language, the FCC should encourage broadcasters to maintain high standards without infringing on free speech. Please help America keep some level of decency in its broadcast programming.
