

I was very concerned when I heard the FCC is considering relaxing their restrictions against nudity and cursing on network television. I feel this would be detrimental to our society as a whole, and I am exceedingly concerned about the negative impact this would have on our children. These types of allowances on cable television already prevent us from purchasing cable television packages. Nudity and cursing are not things which we allow into our home, and if these types of behavior are permitted and/or upheld on network television programs, then we would have to remove the television from our home as well. Is it too much to ask that we be able to keep the option of having family friendly programming on network television?
