

I oppose changing the existing decency laws. A person is not allowed to go nude in a public place because that is considered socially unacceptable in America. A person appearing nude in public is subject to fines, jail time and in some states they are even made to register as a sexual offender...even for non-sexual nudity. Television is a public resource and therefore, what is not permitted in public should not be forced upon people in their own homes. Please let's keep our laws consistent.

Regarding the F-word, it is highly offensive to many people. In the workplace, a person using such language must stop if someone is offended or else face sexual harassment charges. The fact that there are large segments of the population that are offended by profanity such as this is reason enough that it should not be allowed on public television.
