

Please do not change the current FCC indecency standards. Allowing television and radio stations to broadcast expletives and nudity on the public airwaves, even if brief or "fleeting," would do more harm than good. If television and radio stations are fighting hard for this change, it would only be because they are running out of good ideas. And nudity is always sexual, just ask a 13 year old, who would be able to see it on tv if the rules are changed. This is also not a first amendment issue, as neither have anything to do with free speech.

Again, please do not change the current FCC standards. It would only lead to television and radio stations asking for even more standards to be lowered down the road. Keep it where it is, and tell them to just do a better job of writing. It is not that hard to leave expletives and nudity out, not hard at all.
