

I wholeheartedly am against slackening the censorship standards of television. If this were to pass, and happen; I believe I'd never own a tv for the purposes of viewing shows ever again. It shouldn't matter that the f word and other expletives are heard all too often while in public, much like the idea, "we are what we eat," we will adopt speech and vocabulary from what we watch and surround ourselves with. If even more, and more diverse swearing is allowed on TV swearing will increase; but also those of us who dislike the use of expletives will have to hear them more, and will be more likely to use them ourselves. It is a sad thing when you hear a small child using bad language, but it is due to their parents and family and what they watch and view and say as well as other outside influences like school/friends.

As for "full frontal nudity," no thanks. That would be much worse than additional expletives. If you guys want to watch that stuff, have fun with HBO and the internet, etc, but please allow the rest of us to still have the choice of whether or not we view such material.
