

I erred on my previous submission which should have been addressed elsewhere.

As for lowering the broadcast standards which could allow a more liberal approach to programming, whereby more sexually explicit language/content could be aired, it is a terrible idea. I have been associated with a number of people who have run afoul of the law because of sexual misconduct due in large part to already much too much exposure to pornographic material on the radio/tv/internet/movies.

A friend of mine asked his father to watch his normal programs from 7-9 p.m and count the number of sexual references. He came up with over 25 coming from programs and advertising. That type of exposure is unnecessary. Regrettably most of the sexual referencing is directed toward and about women. No wonder there are so many sexual attacks/abuses towards women. Where do you think they get the idea.
