To whom it may concern:

Recently, I read an article regarding the FCC announcement that received little attention but could have a major impact on American families. “The FCC, on April 1 announced it is considering changes to the current broadcast indecency policies that would permit “isolated expletives” and isolated “non-sexual nudity” on broadcast TV.”

As a mother of 3 children, I would emphatically disagree with this change to permit expletives and nudity on regular television. The reason is because it tries to redefine appropriateness in everyday life. We are raising our children with what we consider a solid moral code. And although we currently shield them from so much that media pushes on them, it would cross yet another line.

It would further deprave an already immoral media nation. It rolls around in its lack of character and forces everyone in it to accept a fickle and crass “world” that just wants to get instant gratification on the latest “feel good”. I am entirely annoyed. Stand for something wholesome! Our children are going to be a mess if you don’t.

Please do not put nudity and expletives on our regular programming!

Fight for families!

Thank you
