

I support the FCC maintaining their current standards in relation to nudity and profanity on public television and would discourage any movement toward relaxing those standards. Americans are already subjected to plenty of indecent, lewd, and offensive images. Anyone who seeks to view this type of coarse material has ready access through the internet or private cable/satellite TV and it is their right to access it. It is my right to not have indecent material force upon me and my family when we are not seeking it out. Sitting and watching public television should be an informative, enjoyable, and safe experience - devoid of the worry of having myself or young children viewing salacious images or hearing obscene words.
