Dear FCC,

Please do not change the existing indecency policies to allow for more emotionally and morally harmful content to be broadcast on television. I have three young children. It is already almost impossible for them to watch most late night programming. However, they still enjoy watching some of the reality T.V. programs that involve adventure and competitive themes. I fear that by relaxing your standards, yet again, the words they will hear and the nudity they may see would make it impossible for them to be able to watch those programs.

I am also a consumer of late night television and I will not watch a show that has more profanity and any nudity. I don't need that in my life and I am too greatly impacted by crass and vulgar topics to allow myself to watch such programs.

Please don't change your existing policy.

Sincerely,

Spencer Rice
