

I do not agree with the FCC's desire to relax its standards regarding broadcast television. Individuals wanting to view programs with more nudity and profanity already have various channels to which they can subscribe. Relaxed standards on broadcast channels will force many concerned families to turn off the televisions altogether. In the long run, I believe this will reduce overall viewership.

It is also unfair to simply tell people to 'turn it off'. Children will always find a way to access these programs even if I block it in my home. Much of the content on television today is very questionable - please do not relax the decency standards and make things worse.
