

I am frankly shocked and disgusted by the FCC's intent to further relax the decency standards on regular television and radio air ways. I am trying to raise my children in a way that engenders goodness and decency in their actions. The last thing that I need is for children to be able to turn on regular network television and hear profanity and see nudity. Such conduct, while fully protected by the 1st Amendment, does not have a place on regular network television. Furthermore, reasonable restrictions on such content in no way restricts the free speech rights of anyone who desires to express themselves in such a way. There are thousands of outlets for such conduct. Please do not remove the few remaining safe harbors that parents have. Thank-you.
