

I oppose the proposed changes to allow non-sexual nudity and expletives including the f-word and s-word to be aired on television. There is no reason for the FCC to bend to the demands of networks, especially since the Supreme Court has held up the FCC's legality in censoring these from television.

These features, in my opinion, offer nothing of artistic value. The public will not be improved because they are allowed to hear more profanities. Those who care to can subscribe to cable channels like HBO or pay for movies if they like nudity and obscenities, but TV is a public resource, and higher standards should be applied to it. An enlightened civilization does not mean we have to listen to the gutter trash.
