

I wish to express my deep disappointment in the consideration the FCC is giving to loosening the standards of public television viewing. I feel that television programming today has pushed the boundaries of decency in every way possible, and that the result has been an eroding of moral representation in our society. Please do not allow this situation to become even worse by modifying the still existing standards of decency that are enforced. The result, I am afraid, would be that families and moral persons would be unable to justify watching regular programming on television in the future, which would most likely spell the downfall of public television.
