

I also, separately from my husband, very strongly oppose any relaxing of rules and enforcement of existing rules against indecency, nudity, or profanity over the airways and general-public cable and satellite networks. It is impossible for me, while cooking dinner, to stand in front of the TV with my hand on the remote and anticipate the second before indecency, nudity, or profanity will be transmitted to my young children. The utter failure of the FCC to enforce existing rules has resulted in the gradual insertion of more and more of this filth into prime-time TV when families with young children are watching. We established the FCC to protect our children from this filth being broadcast into our homes. Without strong enforcement and application of sufficient financial penalties, networks will only increase their flaunting of existing FCC rules. This proposed relaxation of the rules will make it impossible to protect our own children – except for the unrealistic option of removing the TV from our house. It's our (the public) airwaves, not the airwaves of companies who want to increase the filth they can pump into our homes. I also strongly oppose the proposed rules and demand that the FCC aggressively enforce existing FCC rules.
