

I am fully able to censor what I want to watch and what my family can watch without the need for a government organization to do it for me. If I don't want certain language or nudity on my television screen I don't have to watch things that contain it, if the majority of people feel like me and prefer not to watch those shows, the free market will shut those shows down via lack of advertising. In a world of Netflix, TiVo, Hulu, and the internet, I really don't have to worry about my personal freedom to choose my own entertainment conflicting with someone else's values. However, someone else's values being inflicted on my free will to watch whatever I want is still happening despite the technological advances allowing them to censor what they want. This is wrong and unconstitutional. The backlog can be solved by ignoring all complaints and informing the filiers to install an "off" switch on their remote.
