

I STRONGLY OBJECT to the FCC's proposal to loosen restrictions on indecent materials on media outlets, including but not limited to public television and radio. Rather than relaxing punishments for such materials, I strongly encourage and request that the FCC increase punishments for violations of decency. It is highly offensive and alarming that any nudity and profanities would even be considered. Such an approach is highly irresponsible and demeaning to society and individuals. The FCC has an obligation to object to such indecency. Displays of nudity are particularly demeaning to women, who become victims and objects rather than individuals and valued members of society. Relaxing the standards of decency in society has been shown in research to have negative repercussions on societies and individuals. Rather than facilitating an increase in indecency in our society as the FCC is entertaining, I strongly urge the FCC to increase PUNISHMENTS for those that promote indecent materials on public media outlets.
